

Brindell Named In Eleven Cases As Bribe-Taker

Contractors Testify Labor Czar Got Sums Ranging From $200 to $3,000 in Cash on Various Jobs

Say He Spurned Checks Money Paid Either to Prevent Strikes or to End Existing Ones, They Assert

Eleven instances in which Robert P. Brindell, president of the Building Trades Council, is alleged to have collected bribes for calling off strikes on construction work were related by witnesses at Brindell's trial on charges of extortion before Justice John V. McAnis yesterday in the criminal branch of the Supreme Court.

It was said that witnesses testified that Brindell collected in cash and put into his own pocket ranging from $200 to $3,000. The testimony was that contractors paid the money at Brindell's office, at 12 St. Mark's Place, to induce the labor leader to prevent threatened strikes, or to order workmen to return to work on jobs where strikes had been called.

Alleged Bribes Enumerated

Jobs on which Brindell collected bribes and the amounts paid him, according to the testimony, were housewrecking or excavation work for office buildings at these places:

- Stock Exchange Annex, Broad and Wall streets, $2,500; northeast corner Forty-second Street and Madison Avenue, $2,000; the old Hotel Manhattan, $3,000; Twenty-third Street, near Madison Avenue, $500; Sixty-sixth Street and Madison Avenue, $250; Washington, near West Street, $500; Gotham National Bank building, Fifty-ninth Street, near Columbus Circle, $450; Garment Center Realty Company building, Thirty-eighth Street and Seventh Avenue, $500; 105th Street and Fifth Avenue, $200; Forty-ninth Street and Seventh Avenue, $200, and a building in Brooklyn, $236.

Albert A. Volk, an excavating contractor, and Louis J. Cohen, a housewrecking contractor, testified that Brindell told Volk to inform the officials of the Gotham National Bank to put $25,000 in a hole in the excavation work so that the building could be erected without any delay by strikes.

John charged that Brindell collected $25 in initiation fee for each workman on a certain job to join the Brindell council and that the workmen were not to be told that they had been told.

Brindell, riding around the city in an automobile with Volk, explained that he had collected $5,000 on various jobs under construction, it was testified.

Brindell told contractors to inform him "how much there was in it for jobs," before making bids on jobs, the witness said, and added that on certain jobs Brindell collected 25 cents a day for each workman employed.

Typical Instances Cited

Typical of the instances related by Volk was this:

"When work on the Stock Exchange annex was under way a short time Brindell appeared and asked me how much I was getting for it. I told him $25,000. He said: 'You are a fool. You could have gotten much more than that.' I replied that I might be a fool but that he told me not to count him in on it, so I made my bid low. He became angry and wanted to know how much there was in it for him. I told him $2,000. He said: 'Do you think I am a piker?' He went away. The next day I went to see him at his suggestion. I said $2,500 would be as much as I could pay. He finally agreed to take it. I telephoned to our cashier and had the money sent down to where I was at Brindell's office, in St. Mark's Place.

"We were in a room alone when I handed him the money in bills. He put it in his pocket hurriedly. Then I asked him to count it. He then took it out and looked it over quickly. He said: 'You're getting off pretty easy this time.' I told him there would be other jobs and he would get money on them."

Volk will be cross-examined by Martin W. Littleton, counsel for the defendant, when the trial resumed this morning.

The largest amount which Cohen said he paid to Brindell was $3,000, an "O. K." to wreck the interior of the old Hotel Manhattan.

New York Figured To Be City of 15,976,000 in '60

Estimate Offered in Brief Opposing Sewer Outlet in Waters of Lower Bay

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—New York City expects to have almost 16,000,000 inhabitants—15,976,000, to be exact—by 1960.

City Attorney General Charles D. Newton, of New York, so informed the Supreme Court today in a brief asserting that the metropolis had prior rights to sewage disposal facilities of the lower bay.

New York State is Seeking to Enjoin the Passaic Valley (New Jersey) Sewerage Commission from Constructing a Sewerage Trunk Sewer down the Valley to New York Lower Bay

The brief said, already as so polluted as to be a menace to health, and $400,000 emergency relief project is under discussion, involving an island disposal plant in the bay.

Boy Scout on Panama Trip Accompanies Scientists to Collect Plant and Animal Life

Three scientists and a Boy Scout sailed yesterday on the Steamer Panama, to collect specimens of plant and animal life in the Panama Canal Zone for the Everhart Museum in Scranton, Pa. The scientists were R. N. Davis, a zoologist, Dr. J. J. G. Davis, a taxidermist, and Dr. J. G. Davis, an entomologist, and head of the Bureau of Plant Life Industry in Pennsylvania.

The Boy Scout was Ford Petrick, high school senior and envy of Scranton youth, because he gets out of five months' school work and is in for a heap of adventure, yet will receive a diploma on his return. Ford was selected as an all-around Scout when the scientists decided to follow the example of another similar expedition in taking a boy abroad last summer.

The expedition is financed by Colonel A. A. Waters, Scranton business man, and former Lieutenant Governor of Pennsylvania.

Birds, mammals and reptiles, as well as plants, will be collected. Dr. Davis, in command, said yesterday just before the sailing.

Jealousy, It Seems, Deleted Long Beach Out of Census

"All Wrong," Shrugs Police Chief When Hint Is Given Suppressed Bathing Girls Might Have Done Some Suppressing; Count Is Being Made

Long Beach hit the front pages of the newspapers yesterday, showing that you can't keep a good beach quiet, even if you bury it under a layer of ice and hire Walter Barriscale by the year to censor the bathing girls.

Yes, sir, you'd think—at least Palm Beach and Miami think—that any Long Beach beach would be content to monopolize the headlines in the summer and let honest tropical resorts have a little glory in January, but here is Long Beach holding up the whole United States census because some one overlooked it last spring.

Hadn't missed it? Well, Long Beach missed itself. When it found that it had not been included in the census it raised such an uproar that the Washington Herald, it even before the tumult Rock away Beach is having over the three navy balloons who sailed away from there.

"Yes, sir, when they heard our 'holer' down there in Washington they stopped the presses," said Chief of Police Barriscale yesterday, "and they sent a man up here mighty quick. He got on the job yesterday, and my wife is helping him count up the folks. We know most everything here, but I don't know just when they'll finish up. It's pretty important, and since they took their time counting us we intend to let them wait a while. We are satisfied the thing is right at last. Maybe they'll get done to-morrow or next day. I guess maybe they'll have to write out four or five hundred people at the very least."

Chief Barriscale professed great indignation at the suggestion that his activity in suppressing the too-short bathing suit and the dimpled-kneed bathers might have been the cause of the "insult" in overlooking Long Beach.

"None of those girls would be that spiteful," he said. "They were good-hearted girls, some of 'em had right cute dimples, too—and it's 'forgive and forget' with 'em, I'm sure."

The Police Department of Long Beach blames the folks over in the town of Baldwin for this census omission. Rivalry is suggested, the beach police saying that officials in Baldwin were supposed to report Long Beach and neglected to do so.

Palmer Should Be Ousted, Undermyer Says in Address

Patronage Beneficiaries Who Were Paying Political Debts Swarmed to Democratic Convention, He Declares

"Mr. Palmer ought to be removed from office on his confession alone that he suppressed the enforcement of the anti-trust laws during the war. Since when has the Attorney General the right to suspend the enforcement of any part of the criminal laws?" said Samuel Undermyer yesterday in another attack by him on Attorney General Palmer.

Mr. Undermyer attacked the Attorney General in a public speech Tuesday night. Mr. Palmer replied in a statement issued in Washington Wednesday night. Mr. Undermyer's latest is in answer to the Attorney General's reply.

Mr. Undermyer in his statement yesterday asserted that the Lockwood committee with an expenditure of $25,000 "did a hundredfold more to uncover illegal combinations than the Department of Justice did in eight years with its money," which was marked, was found on the agents. They were held in $2,500 bail each for a hearing.

They arrested Kline and seized the liquor. Kline was arraigned before United States Commissioner Hitchcock and held in $1,000 bail.

Alfred Ketcham and Charles Walters, prohibition agents, were brought before Commissioner Hitchcock charged with extorting $20 each from William Brady, a saloonkeeper, at 402 Second Avenue. According to Maxwell S. Matlock, Assistant United States Attorney, the money, which was marked, was found on the agents. They were held in $2,500 bail each for a hearing.

Appears on Fake Subpoena

Michael Pfeifer, a saloonkeeper, at 1616 Sixth Avenue, was seen wandering around the corridors of the Federal Building yesterday with a "subpoena" in his hand.

He said that Wednesday night, after he had served three men with glasses of beer—up to date, non-alcoholic stuff—one of the men had handed him the "subpoena" with instructions to be at the Federal Building next day. Well, here he was, he said.

It developed that no subpoena had been issued for the appearance of Mr. Pfeifer and that the one he held was not in order. It was on the regular government form, but whoever had signed for United States Attorney Caffery had slipped up on the spelling and spelled it "Cafce."

Indicted on a Permit Charge

Lawrence Malawista, a bonding agent for surety company, who was arrested January 6, charged with conspiracy to defraud the government in connection with an attempt to obtain a basic liquor permit, was indicted yesterday by the Federal grand jury.

Four men charged with violations of the Volstead act pleaded guilty in the United States District Court and were sentenced by Judge Learned Hand to serve four years in jail each.

Revenue agents arrested in Brooklyn six men who are said to have been ignoring the Volstead act, or maintaining public nuisances. All were held.

Bedtime Stories

Sammy Jay Keeps Watch

By Thornton W. Burgess

Patience in a cause that's good becomes a virtue, as it should.

—Sammy Jay.

Sammy Jay was awake as usual at break of day the next morning and was the first to get breakfast at the food shelf Farmer Brown's boy had placed in the apple tree on the edge of the Old Orchard. Just as he finished the Chickadee arrived. As usual Tommy was bubbling over with high spirits and could hardly keep his tongue still long enough to eat. Then came Drummer the Woodpecker. He had little to say, but strictly attended to the business of filling his stomach.

Yank Yank the Nuthatch arrived a few minutes later and politely waited for Drummer to finish his breakfast before taking his turn at that fine suit. When Yank Yank had finished Seep Seep the Brown Creeper took his place. Sammy Jay silently watched the bird until breakfast was over. Then he asked: "Has any one seen Whitey the Snowy Owl, that big white robber from the Far North, lately?"

A little shiver ran over all the little people at mention of Whitey, and the happiness which full stomachs had made gave way to a worried look in the eyes of all.

"I saw him yesterday," replied Tommy Tit. "In fact, he so nearly caught me that I didn't get over it all the rest of the day. I can take care of myself when I can see danger, but when what looks like a lump of snow suddenly comes to life and tries to catch a fellow it gets me so shaky and nervous that there is no pleasure in life. If he stays around here for the rest of the winter I guess I shall have to move away."

"The same here," said Drummer the Woodpecker. "I saw him and many more such days as I have just spent. What with the snow and ice winter is hard enough at best. I wouldn't mind so much if that fellow belonged here. But he doesn't, and it seems fair to the rest of us. I wish there was some one big enough to drive him away."

"There is," replied Sammy Jay. "Who?"

"Drummer the Woodpecker and Tommy Tit the Chickadee and Yank Yank the Nuthatch and Seep Seep the Brown Creeper together," Sammy looked mysterious. "Some one said he, 'I've come here to get him to do it.' Sammy looked very important as he said this.

The others teased and teased Sammy to tell them who it was, but Sammy wouldn't. Finally they gave up teasing and flew away to the Green Forest, and saw away to the Green Forest.

Boston Warrant Reveals Past of De Clamecy

As Financier, Jurist, General, He Has Collected $500,000 in Decade, Is Detective's Charge

Given Keys of the City Sentenced to Ten Years After Being Feted by Bench and Business Men

Boston, where Felipe de Clamecy was all the rage nine or ten years ago, extended a formal invitation yesterday to that British financier, French jurist, French general and all-round "con" man to revisit the city. Its emissary, State Detective William M. Robinson, who was dispatched upon his mission by no less a personage than Governor Cox of Massachusetts, was informed, however, that New York's claim upon De Clamecy came first.

In 1912 the Boston Chamber of Commerce gave a state dinner in honor of the visiting British financier, Felipe de Clamecy, and the Mayor presented the keys of the city to him. Later Felipe de Clamecy, then the French jurist, was the guest of the judges of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts at an equally formal dinner.

Convicted of Forgery

Now, the Commonwealth of Massachusetts wants Felipe de Clamecy back again to complete a ten-year term in the Massachusetts penitentiary.

The same year that De Clamecy received the keys of the city, Boston and was the guest of the Supreme Court Bench, he was sent to the penitentiary for forgery. He was released on parole in 1917 because of his supposed proficiency in aeronautics and became a Massachusetts Institute of Technology as an instructor.

He is alleged to have violated that parole in various ways, profitable and otherwise, to himself, and so Detective Robinson was sent for him as soon as the Massachusetts authorities learned that he had been captured in this city as he fled down the fire escape of a rooming house in West Thirty-seventh Street from detectives seeking him on a charge of forgery.

Detective Robinson averred that the exploits of the financier-jurist-general in this country had netted him no less than $500,000. He was most anxious to take him back to Boston and the warrant issued by Governor Cox had been countersigned by Governor Miller of this state. Assistant District Attorney Josiah H. Banton declined to honor the warrant, however, saying that it was the law that an offender arrested in this state should be tried for his offense here, and being surrendered to another state.

$300 Forgery Charged

So the redoubtable De Clamecy is to be tried on a paltry forgery charge involving a check for a mere $300, which William Dench, secretary of the Underwood Company, Cashier of 30 Vesey Street, cashed for him in the erroneous belief that the check would be honored at the bank.

General De Clamecy to give him his most recent title and the one upon which he insisted when overtaken in his fire escape flight—pleaded to be allowed to return to Boston. It was not the humiliation of the $300 episode to which he objected, but in Boston he had a wife and child to whom he was devoted.

Assistant District Attorney Banta rudely reminded him that he appeared equally devoted to a woman found in the room from which he had fled in West Thirty-seventh Street, and before being led away to jail had magnanimously turned his pockets inside out for her.

De Clamecy accepted his fate philosophically. He is used to ups and downs. One month he had the keys of Boston and the next the keys were on the opposite side of a grated door. One week he had been a convict and the next an aeronautical instructor for the government at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Becomes Promoter

One day he had been an instructor and the next a fugitive thief, seeking to sell the delicate instruments stolen from the institute. Still a fugitive, but also a general, he had sought to impress his merits upon the military authorities at Camp Devens.

Falling in that, and narrowly escaping the guardhouse, he had blithely embarked upon a career as promoter and turned up in Buffalo, N. Y., with a $10,000,000 oxygen manufacturing company in his waistcoat pocket. With a shrug of his shoulders at Mr. Banton's demand that he send him back to Massachusetts, Felipe de Clamecy accepted this new turn of affairs.

The Will of the People Is Nearly Always Honest

That one sentence which immortalized Governor Coolidge, when the Boston Police were out upon a strike, and the proposition was made to the Governor to arbitrate the question, was when he said,

"The judgment of those who direct it is sometimes at fault. Not so, always, fortunately."

"Massachusetts can never arbitrate law and order."

There was something akin to Abraham Lincoln in the inspiration of the Governor, now Vice President-elect of the United States.
